Local company Questek wins electronic ticketing contracts

TWO Eastern Cape public transport electronic ticketing systems contracts have been won by Questek Transit Technologies. A R2-million contract was awarded by Africa Best 350 (AB350) and includes the installation of Questek's Wayfarer ticketing system into 71 buses. AB350 is a consortium of individual, small bus operators situated in the Eastern Cape that have established a 100% empowered company with a focus on purchasing new buses to service the former Transkei region. Additionally, Buffalo City Municipality has awarded Questek the tender to install its electronic ticketing system into 15 buses. Electronic ticketing solutions provide bus operators with passenger information and route monitoring information. The system is based on smart card ticketing, which helps to manage revenue and increase operational efficiencies, Questek said. — Staff Reporter

Questek awarded smart ticketing contract

PUTCO recently signed a multi-million rand contract to install Questek Transit Technologies automatic smart card and fare collection system into 350 buses as part of a pilot project. Rehana Moosajee, MMC for Transport in the City of Johannesburg, addressed the guests and remarked that the move was a major step towards providing a world-class public transport service.

She continued that it was also important for improving the image of public transport, not only as a means to move around but also as a way to build communities, as bus transport gives people the opportunity to remove themselves from the stress of daily life and chat to other commuters.
